No worries for the length! Be careful! Lack of focus on the topic: The task asks for a discussion on how electronic devices and the use of the Internet affect society and whether they have a negative impact on our daily lives. However, the student focuses on artificial intelligence (AI) and its potential impact on humanity, which is an important topic, but not the main focus of the task.

Grammar and Spelling 1,5 /2,5

There are several grammatical errors in the essay, such as "get abolish" and "goes worst," which could hinder understanding. While the meaning can still be inferred, the errors are significant enough to affect clarity.

"Could artificial intelligence ~~get~~-eradicate our humanity?" (In modal questions, "get" is not used before the main verb)

"I strongly consider this amazing and emerging technology could suppose a huge hazard for us and also to preserve our survivalism" ("Consider" is not used correctly here; "believe" is more appropriate. More than a potential "hazard", you refer to a real "threat", then "Suppose" should be "pose" when referring to a threat. "Survivalism" is a technical term not suitable here; "survival" is the correct term.) -> "I strongly believe this amazing and emerging technology could pose a huge threat to us and our survival."

"We must act as soon as possible and ~~get~~-abolish the frenetic and decontrolled development it is already getting." ("Abolish" should be used directly. "Frenetic" is fine, but "decontrolled" is not commonly used; "uncontrolled" is more appropriate. Additionally, "getting" should be "undergoing" in this case.)

"And there are several to support my mere opinion." (The phrase needs to be more specific, you need something to complete the sentence: "reasons", "researchs", ...)

"First and foremost, ~~a~~-Japanese research has discovered recently the AI application they are currently developing has already been able to modify its own font code without any help and get avoid the restrictions and limitations imposed previously from our part." ("Japanese research" or "a Japanese study" - 'research' doesn't need an article in this context. Word order: "has RECENTLY discovered". The phrase "has been able to" is redundant, so it's better to say directly "has modified." "Get avoid" should be corrected to "bypassed."

"At the same time, this type of technology involuntarily contributes to reduce our own mental capacity and it goes worst." ("contributes to," + gerund ("reducing"). "worst" = superlative -> 'get worse' or 'worsens'.)

"In conclusion and finally, we need to ~~be~~-correct this trend and to that, we must think more and better." ("to DO that / to DO SO", "think more and better" doesn't sound natural, probably you wanted to say "more critically").

Vocabulary 2 /2,5

The vocabulary used is fairly varied, but some words are not used correctly or are less appropriate for the context, such as "hazard" and "abolish." Some word choices hinder clarity, but the vocabulary range is still decent.

Cohesion and Coherence 1,5 /2,5

The essay lacks clear structure and cohesion, with ideas that don't always flow logically. The argument is also somewhat disjointed and doesn't consistently focus on the task. Improvements in linking ideas and sticking to the main topic would be beneficial.

Format and Register 2 /2,5

The format is mostly acceptable, but the tone could be more formal. The use of phrases like "get abolish" detracts from the formal nature expected in an academic essay. The overall format is adequate, but the language could better match the task's requirements.

See you in January!
